(p) 'Irish Pink'

cv. Parentage unknown. R: unknown (pre-1937). Fls single, bright crimson ground, centre and lacing pale pink (description from McMurtrie cat. 1953). This may be the plant described in R. Bird (Border Pinks, 1994) as fls single, with a purplish pink ground (nearest to strong purplish pink, 62A, but flushing from the eye makes it difficult to assess), heavily overlaid with strong purplish red (60A), with a paler ground showing through around the petal margins; scented; leaves 'quite narrow', blue-green; stems 30cm. It may not be the same as the plant described in C.O. Moreton (Old Carnations and Pinks, 1955, as fls semi-double, 32mm wide, crimson ground, with white stripes and marking; margins fringed: this was said to be an 'old variety' found in a garden in Cork, Ireland in 1937).

(p) Ise Group
Gp Various recorded as a mutant of chinensis ("var. laciniatus") or as hybrids between superbus var. longicalycinus and chinensis (D. × isensis). R: E. Tsugumatsu (pre-1866). Fls single, 1–3/ stem, with elongated, drooping, often wavy or twisted, deeply and finely laciniate petals, mostly 5–15cm long (but recorded up to c.50cm), varying from red, pink or white selfs to striped/mottled; with a yellowish green, red or white eye. The flowers often need to be opened by hand. Lvs greyish green. Not long-lived; propagated by seed or cuttings. Reported to have been developed in Japan during the Edo Period (early seventeenth century to mid 1860s) and sometimes credited as having been found originally as a mutant in his Dianthus chinensis plants by Eiji Tsugumatsu (1803–1866), a Japanese Samurai and a member of the Kishu (Tokugawa) clan, living in the Ise area (Mie Prefecture, Japan). No cultivar names are known to be in use for these plants.

(pf) 'Marmion'
cv. 'Mrs T.W. Lawson' × 'Prosperity'. R: H. Burnett (1906). Fls cherry ground, margined white; clove-scented. Standard. AM 1907. There is some confusion about this plant. It has been listed as a malmaison, but the parentage given (taken from the 1928 USA Register) would indicate both parents were perpetuals. The USA list gives the description listed above, as do Douglas lists and Sanders (1910). The latter sources also suggest the parentage involved a malmaison and a pf. G. & A. Clark (cat., 1911) suggest it had very large, red and white flowers, resembling a malmaison in form, but listed it as 'winter-flowering' variety.

cv. Parentage unknown. R: J. Sinkins (1868). Fls fully double, white ground, with a light green eye (which is more evident when the calyx splits, which it is prone to do, when the flower can be up to 45mm wide); margins fairly deeply toothed; strongly scented. Stems up to 25cm. June to July. FCC 1880. Etymology: named after the wife (Catherine) of the raiser (John Sinkins). Bird (1994) reports that Catherine Sinkins claimed the plant was derived from a cross of 'Fimbriatus' and a clove carnation. Mrs Sinkins and her son also are said to have remembered the original as having a crimson fringe or some crimson markings. Plants under this name have clearly varied somewhat in character and at least one firm has sold seed under this name, adding to the potential confusion. It was introduced by C. Turner of the Royal Nurseries, Slough and is incorporated into the Slough coat of arms. Probably sometimes what is listed as 'Mrs Sinkins Pink' (but see 'Pink Mrs Sinkins' also).
